"If the business done by the associations under what is called the 'national plan' should, after investigation, commend itself to the jurigment of the legislature then express authority, subject to proper taxation, should be given to do it and this department relieved of further embarrassment upon the subject. If not, then legislation should be enacted to stop the same, and in order that our own citizens should not be discriminated against heavy license fees should be Fourth Annual Convention of the Nebraska Local League.

AN OUTLINE OF IOWA'S NEW LAW

Preparations for the National Convention at Philadelphia-Proposed Laws, Court Decisions and State Reports.

The fourth annual convention of the Ne braska League of Local Loan and Building Associations will be held in Lincoln next Tuesday. Matters of considerable importance o the associations of the state will be considered, papers on pertinent subject read and discussed and officers chosen for the ensuing year. President Phelps and Secretary Bryson have made all arrangements for the convention and expect a larger attendance than at any previous meeting of the league.

Although the league is not as actively supported by state associations as it deserves to be, its members represent the strongest and most progressive of mutual associations. To their influence and intelligent zeal is due the spiendld work accomplished by the league in the last three years. By unity of purpose and action it has secured the exclusion from the state of foreign association which refused compliance with the law, seek-ing to secure instead special privileges lenied associations chartered by the state This alone entitles the league to the gratitude of the public, for it has savel the people of the state thousands of dollars and prevented a repetition here of the swindling operations by which the people of neighboring states in the east were taken n and plucked. Another advantage of the is the bringing together annually of he bright minds identified with co-operative associations and the interchange of though and experiences, thus exemplifying the

The law governing building and loan asso-ciations passed by the last legislature of Iowa is the fruit of statesmanship allied to he policy of "locking the stable after the torse was stolen." Costly experience was ecessary to arouse public sentiment. Th dividual purse was touched for many sound dollar by the Des Moines and Minne-sota looters, the public conscience was awak-ened, and its demand crystalized in the act which is now the law of the state.

In substance the law restricts and regulates ocal and foreign associations. Local assoiations are obliged to confine their business o the county in which their headquarters are located. Their articles of incorporation are subject to the approval of the executive amendments can become effective without ex-ecutive sanction. They cannot receive de-posits of money without issuing shares herefor, and cannot transact a hanking burn meas. The amount of stock which any person may carry is limited to $10,000, par value The expenses for every association are limited to $8 for the unturing of every $100 of installment stock and $2 per year for every $100 of full paid or prepaid stock. At least once each year the auditor of state shall, by himself or some competent person ap-pointed by him, make an examination of all building and lean associations doing busiash or United States bonds or other securit utisfactory to the auditor, and this deposit held by the auditor shall be made a security for all claims of resident shareholders against the association. The fees for the foreign building and toan associations are as follows: For each ap-plication to do business in the state, $100; or each certificate of authority and each renewal thereof, $50; for filing each annual statement of the assets of the association, rom $3 to $50, according to the amount of about one-fourth of the foreign associations. The yearly report must show everything in minute detail in reference to the conduct of the business. The shares of steck issued by all associations shall be classed as moneys and credits for the purpose of taxation. All associations must comply with the provisions of the act within sixty days of its

THE NATIONALS IN PENNSYLVANIA. Penneylvania, the birthplace of the movement in the United States, is so thoroughly covered with local associations that little attention has heretofore been paid to the national brand. The hustlers appear to have found the field an inviting and profitable one, and their ability to outwardly conform o any law enabled them to take root and ourish. Their methods are no more welthe state banking department for 1895 of building and loan associations be vigorously taken hold of by the legislature. The purely local building association, which for so many building association, which for so many building association, which for so many years has existed in our state, and to whose beneficent influence so many of our citizens are indebted for the homes owned by them, is about outlived their usofulness, but as no curb lines have been established on South many object deserving the fostering perience in the conduct of this department shows beyond all controversy that there are low a large number of associations char-ered under our laws doing a business never entemplated by the same. These are not doing a banking and investment business, by means of which enormous amounts of money are escaping the common burden of taxa-tion. This class of so-called building and can associations does business under what is called the 'national' plan. Reference to their reports on file in this department disclose large sums of money carried into what is called an 'expense fund,' and this, together with the considerable sums paid in salaries to officers and commissions to agents, leads me to the conclusion that the business onducted is not and cannot be that of an rdinary building association.

"I am convinced that if a commission was Richardson. appointed to inquire into the subject as to will load passengers bound for the seashore what legislation is needed in reference to the building associations of the commonwealth it would disclose such a condition of affairs as would convince the most skeptical that week the new iron bridge over the Delaware

The Massachusetts legislature is considering two bills affecting bulliaring associations.
The first provides that, should money remain unsold after the monthly meeting, the directors may invest it in first mortgages, on real estate or in banks. Mr. Eldridge, president of the Massachusetts State league, is in favor of the bill and the savings bank commissioners are opposed to it. The jection to it is that it tends to put the The ob ciations on a footing of money making busi-ness concerns and detracts from the features of home making. Another bill, also opposed by the savings bank commissioners, provides for the retirement of unpleaged shares after four years from date of issue and makes it obligatory on the directors to retire un-pledged shares so that no more than 100 shall remain in force in any series nine years from the date of issue.

terested in a secision rendered recently in a West Virg'nia court, in which the question of nearesment and taxation of associations is decided adversely to the latter. The case was by the Ohio Valley Building and Loan association against the county court of Ca-belle county. It was claimed by building and loan associations that the capital stock is exempt from taxation. Last spring the Ohio Valley association claimed an exemption from taxation. Upon the advice of City Attorney Neal, the association took the statement of net assets set out in the pamphlet issued by the association, and assessed the association at $182,000. The county assessor took the assessment made by the city. The appeal was taken to the circuit court. Judge Harvey decided that the capital employed by building and loan associations is subject to taxation the same as the capital used by backs, and, therefore, sustained the action of the aspesor. In all parts of the state the question has arisan, but as yet this is the only decision by a judge of a circuit court.
